FAD OR SERVICE, WHICH? The shoe-buying public is divided into-two classes: One-demanding find primarily; the other demanding service primarily. Five per cent of the people compose the furmer; ninety-five per cent the latter. One demands the gorgeous, startling, stunning kind-eye-catcher-patterns, subber-necker shapes, entirely different every season, doncherknow? Fad first, with a little service thrown How long the shoes will wear is unimportant. The other class wants its money's worth in tangible value—in honest service. It has few dollars to squander. The styles must be attractive, but not extreme. No unheard-of shapes for the element Long ago we decided to let the business of the five-per cent class go to the other fellow. We mean it; if you want fads you will have to buy elsewhere. We have unusual facilities for making good, stylish, serviceable shoes that wear-long, and don't care to have our ability in this line cut down by having to do just what the manufacturer of fads has to do: take out of the quality of the material the additional expense he is put to in equipping his factory for each season's changes—tens of thousands of dollars spent for experimenting, for discarding lasts and patterns and putting in different ones of more extreme shapes. Pad and Service don't usually go together. We offer you: First, styles that are right. The shapes are made to fit the feet. They hug the instep, support the ankle, and distribute the weight of the body in a manner that insures freedom of movement and a strong, graceful step. Patterns are attractive, but not ostentatious; lasts are neat and trim, but not extreme. That is what the great minety-five per cent of the people demand. But above all is the entaring quality. Don't forget that! That's what has made Craddock-Terry Co. the largest shoe house in the South. The retailer takes no risk in carrying these shoes—they are good this season and they will be good next season—he doesn't have to carry so varied a stock, and will sell them on a smaller margin of profit. The money the fad-factory spends for inventing and installing a new extreme, our factory puts These in themselves are sufficient reasons for the person who is looking after his dollars to call for Graddock-Terry Company's "Long Wear" Line. But another, more important than these, is the fact that Craddock-Terry Co. makes its shoes in Lynchburg, in the largest shoe plant in the South. Comfortable living being less expensive than in other shee manufacturing districts, labor and other expense items are smaller, The wearer gets the benefit of these savings in quality of material.
